JEANS WILDER is set to release his second full-length album Totally June 26 on Everloving Records. The 11-track set is his most realized work, packing the sounds of sunshine-y 60's pop, toes-on-the-nose surf jangle and resin-scraping grunge.

On Totally, Jeans sparks and exhales a heavy toke of reverbed guitar, vocal harmonies and downer lyrics into your ears.

Jeans is the nom-de-plume of San Diego-based Andrew Caddick, former band member of Fantastic Magic (with Nathan Williams of Wavves and Matt Barajas of Heavy Hawaii). He has been honing his melancholic beach pop since 2008, channeling the light and darkness of America's Finest City. With a handful of cassette and vinyl releases already under his belt, Totally is as much the next step from his celebrated Nice Trash LP as it is a huge leap forward for the lonesome drifter. Where previous releases have seen much more sparse instrumentation, Totally delivers a more fleshed out sound while bringing Caddick's voice further into the foreground with strong delivery and melodic hooks.

The lo-fi wash and dub-like production are still part of his signature, only now Jeans is a little bit further from the shade and closer to the sand. It's the soundtrack for a bonfire at the moment where you steal away from the others to sit and watch the tide. Somewhere between the crashing churn of the Pacific, Jeans Wilder is out there.

You may know Andrew Caddick as a former member of Fantastic Magic with Wavves' Nathan Williams. Now solo, Caddick plays reverb-drenched lo-fi as Jeans Wilder, making surf-rock inspired indie that sounds like it was left out in the sun too long and got heatstroke. "Limeade" is the first single from his new album Totally, whose title does a great job of conveying the stoned-surfer vibe of Caddick's native San Diego. At two and half minutes, "Limeade," is a short but appropriate sample of Jeans Wilder's SoCal psychedelia with gentle guitar, noncommittal vocals, and a subtly catchy melody. It's a cool drink on a hot summer day, and we think you'll like how it tastes.

- REFINERY29

Surf inspired lo-fi rock seems to be making waves (pun totally intended) in the last few years, and Jeans Wilder is an important member of that scene. Also known as Andrew Caddick, Jeans Wilder has played in other outfits like Fantastic Magic where he made music alongside Nathan Williams who is best known for his band Wavves.

Now Caddick is on his own, and releasing his second full length album titled Totally. After self-releasing various cassettes and then making his "official" debut with Nice Trash, Wilder is promising a leap forward in terms of sound. Like other bands of the genre, Jeans Wilder promises the lo-fi, reverb heavy experience we've come to expect. Where it differs from Wilder's previous work is the added lushness of instrumentation, along with a more pronounced mix that brings Caddick's vocals to the forefront.
